Kaspersky's combination of antivirus and anti-spyware products were used by Edward Snowden when he worked for the National Security Agency (NSA). The Kaspersky Lab used to be a 'Limited Partner' of the NSA's 'NSANet', but when Kaspersky discovered governmental access to their product source code, they took immediate steps to discontinue their involvement with NSANet and ended all cooperation with it.

Kaspersky recently announced plans for a "multi-faceted response" to Microsoft's Windows 10 review period, including a PDF-based security upgrade that allows organizations manage PCs running Windows 10 without logging in; this includes laptops, tablets and desktops. In addition to this, Kessler announced a "competitive analysis of Microsoft's upcoming Windows 10 security features," including a comparison of install methods, readiness for zero-day exploits and more. The company sent a note to its customers on their support website warning them of the risks Windows 10 posed if they had not configured their machines previously. The software giant has been lambasted by cyber-security groups and their customers for its plan to provide enterprises with preinstalled Windows 10 Enterprise system on hard drives. The company's move comes after an open letter from members of the US Department of Homeland Security (DHS) was issued, warning organizations about the dangers of running Windows 10 over PKI and how it could fall prey to hackers. The DHS said to the business community: "Your organization is strongly encouraged to join the Windows Insider program and try out the Windows 10 Enterprise edition for free". In July 2015, several antivirus software makers, including Kaspersky Lab, were banned from taking part in a US military deal because of concerns about their products' ties to the Russian government. In November 2015, it was reported that Kaspersky had been banned from US government computers due to concerns regarding ties with Russian intelligence services. It has been reported by multiple sources that this ban will extend beyond classified computer networks being used by intelligence agencies and also include computers on military networks. The ban extends beyond classified systems being used by intelligence agencies and also encompasses military computer networks.
